Description

BBC Research & Consulting is one of the largest and most respected privately-held economic research and consulting firms in the Rocky Mountain region. Named after our founding partners, BBC was originally part of a research division at the University of Denver specializing in local economic research. We began operations in 1970 and have since grown to include 25 professionals providing market, policy, economic, financial, and statistical research to public and private sector clients across the country. BBC's core strengths are depth of experience, diversity of skills, and professional independence. We emphasize practical results and tailor each of our studies to meet individual client needs.

At BBC Research & Consulting the breadth of our capabilities are matched only by the depth of our experience. Since 1970, BBC has completed more than 5,000 research assignments all across the United States.

Our core business consists of five practice areas, driven by the leadership of our directors and fueled by our passionate staff who are trained in disciplines ranging from economics and accounting to city planning and public affairs. Each assignment presents us with unique issues, motivating our team to deliver custom solutions for clients looking to unpack and understand nuanced complexities.

Housing is a fundamental part of all communities – and a critical part of community development.

Yet the types of housing needed, and the best way to deliver housing to residents, differs due to household characteristics, economic pressures, and community resources.

We conduct customized research to identify our clients' most pressing needs for housing, community development, and community services. These studies result in data-driven strategic plans that do more than simply “make a dent” or comply with federal requirements.

Our research helps communities make a difference.
