Description

The UC Davis School of Medicine is among the nation's leading medical schools, one that is committed to providing the best in student-centered educational experiences. Our school encompasses a diverse group of medical and graduate students who are guided by faculty dedicated to improving lives and transforming health for all.

As part of UC Davis Health, the School of Medicine is helping train the nation's health care workforce and preparing them to become future leaders in health for our communities.

A national reputation for life-changing biomedical discoveries, a passion for clinical care, and a commitment to caring for underserved communities - these are the hallmarks of UC Davis School of Medicine.

Our students are leaders who appreciate rigorous academic training balanced with hands-on experience and a strong desire to serve. Many of our faculty specialize in translational research, covering a wide range of areas, and are engaged in leading-edge, interdisciplinary collaborations within the UC Davis community and with other highly regarded institutions around the country.

Our school is consistently ranked by U.S. News & World Report among the top schools in the nation for primary care training and research. Classrooms and lecture halls are directly across the street from UC Davis Medical Center, one of the nation's premiere teaching hospitals, and many of the university's research laboratories are also on the Sacramento campus and equally convenient.

Since its inaugural class of 1968, UC Davis School of Medicine has played a key role in advancing health in Northern California and beyond through the education of a diverse physician workforce, breakthrough research, outstanding patient care and a commitment to community service.

Highlights of the School of Medicine include:

- Hands-on patient care opportunities at nearby community health clinics;
- Coursework and a curriculum that reflect key societal issues — doctor-patient communication, ethics, clinical reasoning, end-of-life care, cultural competency, self-knowledge and the human side of illness;
- A multi-track Community Health Scholars program to train physician leaders of tomorrow to be better prepared to understand and serve the unique primary health care needs of California's rural, urban and agricultural communities.
- Dual-degree programs, including a master's in public health that utilizes the extraordinary breadth of UC Davis expertise, from its schools of Veterinary Medicine, Management, Law, Education and Nursing to the colleges of Agricultural and Environmental Sciences, Biological Sciences, Engineering, and Letters and Science.
- Research-learning opportunities that ensure young physician-scientists become better skilled and knowledgeable in the translation of basic research discoveries into high-impact clinical applications that will benefit patients;
- Professional development and continuing medical education, with hundreds of seminars, workshops, on-site hospital training, distance learning, online classes, special lectures, and weekly and monthly grand rounds.

Welcome to the Office of Student and Resident Diversity

Our programs are designed to make your journey to becoming a graduate and medical student successful. Many diverse students have appreciated the inclusion and respect that have been a part of their education. Let us support your passion to improve lives and transform the health in the communities that you will serve.

UC Davis School of Medicine—Promoting excellence through diversity

The mission of the Office of Student and Resident Diversity (OSRD) is to create an environment of inclusion and respect, and to actively recruit and fully foster the development of a physician workforce that reflects the rich diversity of our nation and our world — a workforce wholly equipped to serve and care for all people, vigorously committed to reducing health disparities, and passionately dedicated to the goal of achieving true health equity.
