Description

Atlanta-based Cox Communications, a wholly owned subsidiary of Cox Enterprises, is the third-largest cable TV company in the U.S. (behind Time Warner Cable and Comcast), with more than 6.7 million customers nationwide, around 6.3 million of which are basic cable subscribers. Cox provides analog cable TV under the Cox Cable brand as well as digital video services via Cox Digital Cable, with cutting-edge offerings such as digital video recording (DVR), high-definition television and video-on-demand. Cox also provides a bevy of other communications services including local and long-distance telephone (Cox Digital Telephone), high-speed Internet (Cox High-Speed Internet), home networking solutions, and commercial voice and data services (Cox Business Services).

Our work environment is as dynamic and diverse as the perspectives that fuel it. Cox fosters an environment where all 22,000 employees thrive because different viewpoints, expertise and experiences are valued and respected.

Diversity Council

Cox's corporate diversity council, led by company president Pat Esser, is comprised of a group of senior leaders from throughout the company, charged with ensuring that diversity and inclusion receive focused attention and action. Additionally, Cox has established local diversity councils in each of its 14 markets to further tailor the company's diversity efforts to meet unique local needs.
