Workforce and Workplace Diversity

Cultivating an inclusive culture where the best talent can develop and advance is the foundation of our workplace diversity strategy. Time Warner tracks the representation of women and minorities at all levels of the company, and the insights we gain from this process shape how we recruit, develop and advance our talent. For example, candidates for executive positions must include a diverse slate (i.e., women and people of color). We also seek to fill top management positions by promoting from within when we have qualified internal candidates. These two practices drive our efforts to recruit and hire women and people of color into entry-level and mid-management positions, so that we have a strong and inclusive pipeline of candidates for future leadership positions at Time Warner. We are proud to have a U.S. workforce that as of the end of 2011 is approximately half female and one-third people of color.
